From Ireland to Great Britain, from Poland to Germany, from Brazil to Argentina, from the USA to Mexico. The network that is emerging is diverse and it shows: unintentionally pregnant persons around the world are forced to travel across national borders for abortion for a wide variety of reasons. The exercise of reproductive rights and the struggle for reproductive justice happens across national borders.

The international panel of Silvia De Zordo (Spain), Krystyna Kacpura (Poland) and Steph Black (USA) takes a look at the diverse global linkages of transnational abortion. The debate will also address the fear of repression of those affected and of supporters and will focus on what it takes to start the struggle for reproductive justice together.
