Gender equality is a stand-alone goal, but also need to be incorporated into other policy areas. This section examines the Gender Equality Index scores in relation to economic growth (GDP), social protection expenditure, rates of young people not in employment, education or training (NEET), formal childcare provision, women's representation in academia and health care expenditure. In addition, to show the relevance of a composite indicator targeted at the EU context, such as the Gender Equality Index, its results are compared with those of the World Economic Forum's Gender Gap Index.

This section presents an overview of a first attempt to develop a composite indicator that measures direct violence against women across the EU and can act as a tool that can support the monitoring of progress in the eradication of violence against women. Scores are therefore provided only in relation to the EU average due to concerns over data reliability. Results are then contextualised using other relevant indicators, including attitudes surrounding the general acceptability of violence against women, awareness of incidents of violence against women within the social environment, as well as the level of trust in police and justice institutions.
